Mehmood Achakzai faults PTI discipline for Imran's jailing

LAHORE (INP): Mahmood Khan Achakzai, head of Tehreek-e-Tahaffuz-e-Ain Pakistan (TTAP), strongly criticised state conduct, saying that while Pakistan was described as a "fortress of Islam," Islam itself appeared to have been imprisoned within it. Addressing the Aitwan-e-Adl gathering in Lahore on Friday, he condemned violence against women and children and denounced the use of live ammunition against protesters at D-Chowk.

He also rebuked police actions, alleging mistreatment of detainees, and questioned claims of Pakistan being an Islamic state under such circumstances.

Speaking about political unity, Achakzai says he has not come to Lahore to abuse other political parties but to stand with the oppressed. He stated that Pakistan Tehreek-e-Insaf (PTI) enjoyed unprecedented public support, yet its founding leader remains behind bars due to a lack of discipline within the party. Political movements required organisation and discipline to succeed.

Referring to recent protests, he noted that despite the presence of MNAs and MPAs, no loud-speakers were used, highlighting organisational weaknesses. Addressing the youth, he appealed for roads to remain empty on February 8 as a form of peaceful protest, stressing that their movement would remain non-violent and free from abuse or hate speech.

Addressing the gathering, Allama Raja Nasir said Allah had granted human beings the right to freedom, which was also guaranteed in the Constitution of Pakistan, but an oppressive regime had undermined the justice system, people's right to defence and public mandate through constitutional amendments.

Atta Tarar slams PTI's 'soft corner' for outlawed TTP

ISLAMABAD (APP): Federal Minister for Information and Broadcasting Attallah Tarar on Friday strongly condemned the "soft corner" shown by the Pakistan Tehreek-e-Insaf (PTI) for Fitna al Khawarij, regretting their outright reluctance in denouncing the outlawed group's hostility towards the state and its people.

Addressing a press conference alongside veteran politician Zahid Khan, the minister said the PTI leaders absolutely faltered when questioned by the media about the proscribed organization.

Tarar said the people of Khyber Pakhtunkhwa are brave and courageous, but unfortunately ruled by those who have "myopic mindset" with their "regrettable conduct".

During a visit to Lahore, their leaders stooped very low and resorted to use derogatory language against the women leaders of Punjab.

"If a minister of one province speaks such things about a female information minister of another province, he should think whether he can use the same words for his own sisters and daughters," said Atta Tarar while denouncing their conduct as "shameful and regrettable".

As a result of the auction process, Team 7 has been awarded to Hyderabad, while Team 8 will represent Sialkot, officially expanding the HBL PSL to eight teams, said a press release.

The auction attracted strong interest from prospective investors, with nine bidders participating in the Live Auction at Jinnah Convention Centre, Islamabad, reflecting the growing commercial strength, global appeal, and long-term sustainability of the HBL PSL. The induction of Hyderabad & Sialkot Teams further strengthens the league's national footprint and underscores PCB's commitment to inclusivity, regional representation, and fan engagement across Pakistan.

In the first round of the Auction, the base price for the seventh team was set at PKR 110 crore and after a fierce round of bidding US-based FKS Group led by Mr Fawad Sarwar made the winning bid worth PKR 1,750,000,000 and chose Hyderabad out of the six available city names.

The second round saw the base price of the eighth team set to PKR 170 crore, which led to deep interest from the investors as there were two calls for strategic timeout. In the end OZ Group led by Mr Hamza Majeed snapped the eighth team for PKR 1,850,000,000 and chose Sialkot as their team.

Congratulating the successful bidders, PCB Chairman, Mohsin Naqvi, welcomed the new franchise owners into the HBL PSL family, "The expansion of the HBL Pakistan Super League with the addition of Hyderabad and Sialkot is a landmark moment for Pakistan cricket. taunt women leaders of other parties?

They became speechless when asked to comment on Tehreek-e-Taliban Pakistan, he said citing example of the KP Information Minister who became speechless in response to a question during a TV show.

There is no doubt that the TTP carries out attacks on Pakistan under foreign funding, RAW, and Indian patronage, but no word of condemnation came from the KPK government.

They were very fluent while taunting other party leaders, but they kept a complete mum when the TTP is mentioned, he said, adding the PTI leader kept calling terrorists as martyrs, but never had the courage to say or write a single word for appreciation of a soldier of the Pakistan Army.

Referring to the Awami National Party, he said they had given exemplary sacrifices in the war against terrorism and has lifted the bodies of their loved ones. The Bilour family became a target of terrorism and their sacrifices are part of history, he added.

In contrast, the PTI holds a soft corner for terrorists, fearing that they might be attacked by the TTP if they spoke anything about them. In fact, the PTI is not attacked by terrorists due to their open support for them.

The minister said after Operations Zarb-e-Azb and Radd-ul-Fasaad, terrorism had been eliminated from the country, but ironically the PTI brought back terrorism by resettling the terrorists in Pakistan.

He accused the PTI of being directly involved in malicious social media campaigns against the armed forces, regretting their reluctance to support the Pakistan Army in its fight against terrorism.

Terrorists had complete backing of the political wing of Tehreek-e-Inteshar, he said.

Chief Minister Bugti says: Balochistan Govt unveils employee health insurance and electric bike subsidy program

Independent Report
QUETTA: The Balochistan government is set to introduce a comprehensive health insurance scheme for approximately 250,000 provincial employees, Chief Minister Sarfraz Bugti announced. Speaking on X, he highlighted that the government currently spends around 6 to 7 billion rupees annually on medical treatment for its employees, underscoring the need for a transparent and sustainable system. The new health insurance program, approved during a recent cabinet meeting, aims to provide efficient, high-quality medical care to government staff while ensuring accountability and long-term sustainability. Alongside the health initiative, the cabinet also approved an Electric Bike Scheme to support environmentally friendly transport and economic convenience. Under the scheme, students, working women, and government employees will receive a 30 percent subsidy, while the general public can purchase electric bikes through easy installment plans facilitated by bank financing. Chief Minister Bugti described the measures as significant steps toward improving public welfare, promoting sustainable transportation, and easing economic burdens for residents of Balochistan.

SAU, BAC sign MoU for joint research on climate resilience, sustainable agric

Independent Report
QUETTA: Sindh Agriculture University (SAU), Tandojam and Balochistan

Altaf Ali Siyal on behalf of SAU and Principal Prof. Dr. Abdul Razaq Reki on behalf of BAC.

Agriculture College (BAC) Quetta on Friday signed a Memorandum of Understanding (MoU) to boost inter-provincial academic and research collaboration on key agricultural and environmental challenges.

These include dry land and rangeland management, climate change adaptation, forestry development, food security and the effective utilization of drainage and rainwater.

The SAU spokesperson Gul Sher Lochi said the MoU signing ceremony was held at the Senate Hall of the university, where the agreement was formally signed by the Vice Chancellor Engr. Prof. Dr.

The collaboration primarily focuses on research related to water flows from Balochistan's Nari Basin and adjoining areas, drainage water entering Sindh through various natural and artificial channels, rainwater harvesting and the scientific utilization of rain and drainage water for sustainable agricultural production. In addition, joint research initiatives on forestry in Sindh and rangeland management in Balochistan will also be undertaken under this partnership. Addressing the ceremony, Vice Chancellor Prof. Dr. Altaf Ali Siyal highlighted that approximately 25 percent of Balochistan's runoff enters Sindh through Chukhi, flows via Hamal Lake, and then travels through RBOD to Manchar Lake. He added that water also enters Sindh from Balochistan through Nai Gaj and Hub Dam, underscoring the urgent need for inter-provincial cooperation in research, education and climate resilience.

He noted that in recent years, nearly half of Sindh remained submerged due to extreme climatic situations, with rainfall recorded up to 1,600 mm in certain areas, clearly reflecting the growing intensity of climate change impacts.

He urged that joint scientific research was essential to prevent water wastage, ensure safe storage, develop efficient drainage systems and promote the productive use of rain and drainage water in agriculture. Dr. Siyal further shared that experts from SAU and BAC would collaborate on dry land and rangeland management research in Balochistan, while SAU would contribute its expertise under its newly launched forestry degree program to support forest development initiatives in Sindh.

QUETTA (APP): Provincial Coordinator Balochistan AIDS Control Program Dr. Zulfiqar Ali Baloch on Friday said that currently, the number of AIDS patients in Pakistan was around 210,000, out of which only 49,584 were registered. He expressed these views while addressing a seminar held at Quetta Press Club in collaboration with Balochistan AIDS Control and UNICEF on the "Role of Religious Leaders and Media in Preventing HIV/AIDS".

In their separate addresses on the occasion, Dr. Zulfiqar Ali Baloch, Training and NGO Coordinator (BACP) Muhammad Ashfaq, religious leaders Dr. Atta-ur-Rehman, Dr. KD Usmani, Maulana Ahsanul-Haq, Qari Abdul Hafeez, Zakir Usmani, Ehsanullah and others said that scholars, journalists and people belonging to other schools of thought would have to play their role to prevent the growing disease of AIDS. around 38 million, 1.5 million people are falling victim to this disease annually, so far, 34 million people have died from AIDS or its related diseases, most of which are between the ages of 15 and 24.

According to an estimate, about 40 percent of people infected with HIV are young people, which is a moment of concern for all of us, they said. They noted that the HIV and AIDS disease began in Pakistan in 1987 and from 2010 to 2021, there has been an 84 percent increase in the rate of people infected with the virus. They stated that according to the 2022 data of UNAIDS, currently an estimated 210,000 people are suffering from HIV or AIDS in Pakistan, but only about 49,584 people have registered themselves.

Special foreign currency accounts opened for firms in Gwadar Free Zone

GWADAR (INP): The State Bank of Pakistan (SBP) has allowed Habib Bank Limited (HBL) to open special foreign currency accounts (SFCAs) for companies registered in the Gwadar Free Zone, according to an SBP letter, Gwadar Pro reported. Under the approval, enterprises operating in the Gwadar South Free Zone and Gwadar North Free Zone can open SFCAs with HBL, subject to terms and conditions set by the central bank.

The letter says Chinese and other foreign companies in the two zones will be exempt from the Foreign Exchange Policy Framework (FEPF) and may retain up to 50% of their foreign-currency earnings in SFCAs for trade-related payments and remittances.

HBL will open each SFCFA in the name of the relevant entity, with a Gwadar Free Zone identifier to distinguish it from other foreign currency accounts. The letter bars the accounts from being funded by cash foreign-currency deposits or by foreign currency purchased in Pakistan from authorized dealers or exchange companies.

If an entity does not have sufficient funds in its SFCFA to make a legitimate overseas payment, the letter allows HBL to meet the shortfall by purchasing foreign exchange from the interbank market for the underlying transaction.

The bank will obtain an undertaking from the entity confirming that funds are insufficient across all its SFCAs. Entities may convert balances into Pakistani rupees at any time. However, funds converted into rupees cannot be re-credited into the SFCFA. The move follows earlier steps aimed at easing foreign-exchange frictions for firms in the Gwadar Free Zones. Local media have reported that SBP exempted the zones from the FEPF in December last year, a change intended to allow direct conversion of renminbi (RMB) into Pakistani rupees without routing through the U.S. dollar.

Pre-monsoon audit

The NDMA's decision to launch a nationwide Infrastructure Audit Programme before the monsoon is a welcome step. It suggests a shift away from routine warnings towards real action. The programme reflects a lesson Pakistan has learned the hard way: natural hazards turn deadly when roads, buildings and public facilities are ill-prepared. The floods of 2022, the destructive monsoon episodes of 2024, and fresh warnings of heavier rainfall in 2026 show that extreme weather is becoming all too frequent. In this context, the NDMA's plan to inspect high-risk and heavily used buildings is timely. As the federal housing minister noted at the launch, many losses are not caused by nature alone; they also result from unsafe construction, poor maintenance, and infrastructure that fails under predictable stress. Auditing such assets before disaster strikes is a sensible place to begin.

However, Pakistan's real problem has never been a lack of plans but a failure to implement them. Frameworks are announced but responsibility often fades once action is required at provincial and district levels. The new programme will only matter if its findings lead to actual decisions. Unsafe buildings must be repaired or closed, resources must be directed where risks are highest, and political pressure should not override safety concerns. Earlier warnings about a harsher monsoon show us that time is available, but is often wasted. Early alerts mean little if drains remain blocked, encroachments untouched and evacuation plans unenforced. Infrastructure audits must, therefore, be backed by clear timelines, enforcement and public accountability. Otherwise, they risk becoming another report that gathers dust. Urban centres, in particular, cannot continue as they are. Karachi's drainage failures, Lahore's unchecked construction and Peshawar's strained public buildings show the cost of delay. The NDMA has offered a pathway. Whether the state follows this path or again waits for the floodwaters to arrive will decide how much damage the next monsoon causes.

Zafar Mirza | Miftah Ismail

On Jan 1, the government launched the results of the Household Integrated Economic Survey 2024-25 under the subtitle of 'Data-driven insights for inclusive growth' — though we are moving in a direction opposite to inclusive growth, as the HIES data itself shows.

Before moving further, we appreciate the fact that HIES 2024-25 has been done, and technically speaking, done well. It is statistically sound and representative as it covers 32,000 households across the country and across the five socioeconomic quantiles covering both urban and rural Pakistan. And, it's for the first time that the HIES has been done digitally. The Pakistan Bureau of Statistics deserves appreciation.

The six highlights adorning the official press release of the launch as milestones are: three percentile points increase in literacy; two per cent points decrease in out-of-school children and three points increase in the use of clean fuels. Household internet access has jumped from 34pc to 70pc and individuals using the internet has increased from 17pc to 57pc. These are indeed improvements. But then, full immunisation of children improving five percentage points and moving from 68pc to 73pc actually means that 27pc of our children are still not fully immunised. We also know where most of the unvaccinated children are: some 57pc of children in the erstwhile Fata agencies (now districts) and almost two-thirds of children in Balochistan are not fully immunised. But the highlights or milestones of HIES 2024-25 are still shallow waters. Real sharks lurk in deep waters. HIES has indeed been successful in "capturing real lives through real data".

One key revelation of this survey is that the average monthly household income in Pakistan more than doubled between 2018-19 and 2024-25 — from Rs41,545 to Rs82,179. This is a 97.81pc increase. How nice it sounds that, on average, households are now making more money. In terms of income distribution, in 2024-25, the poorest quintile was earning an average of Rs41,851, while the richest was earning Rs139,317 — nearly three times higher. Inequality is more pronounced in the urban areas, where the richest households earn well above Rs146,920, and the poorest remain below Rs42,412. But then, average household consumption expenditure increased by 113pc during the same period. In 2018-19, an average household in Pakistan was consuming or spending Rs37,159 per month; in 2024-25 it was consuming Rs79,150. Overall, as compared to 2018-19, the poor households in the first quintile showed an increase of 84pc, while the rich households in the fifth quintile showed an increase of 131pc, demonstrating a widening increase in consumption between the rich and poor.

The net result of the so-called increased household income and even greater increase in consumption is that in the last six years, an average Pakistani household has become poorer and lives a more difficult life. How much poorer? Let's see.

The real story is hidden in real income values by controlling the inflation effect, i.e., comparing HIES 2024-25 income data with 2018-19 prices. This comparison shows that on average people are poorer today than they were in 2018-19. Except for the richest 20pc of rural households all others, poor and rich in both the urban and rural areas, have lost out on their incomes.

The worst affected are the poorest urban citizens who have lost 23pc of their real income. In 2018-19, the average poorest urban household earned Rs24,365 whereas in 2024-25 the same household made Rs18,820 in 2018-19 prices. The average urban citizen became 19pc poorer and the average rural citizen 7pc poorer in the intervening six years.

Even more disturbing is how this relative poverty is affecting real lives. The major share of household income in terms of percentage is being spent on basic food items — 36.72pc, which is a bit more than in 2018-19, and yet, they are consuming less food than they were six years ago. A table (37.C) in HIES 2024-

25 tells this sad story. Per capita consumption has gone down in almost all main food items. For example, in 2018-19, the average urban Pakistani was consuming 6.12 kilograms of wheat but in 2024-25 s/he was consuming 5.67 kg. All per capita consumption values of essential food items — including, rice, pulses, milk, mutton, beef, chicken, eggs, potato, onion, sugar and tea — have gone down in the last six years in both the cities and the rural areas. The only exceptions to this sad trend are tomatoes and cooking oil.

In essence, Pakistanis are spending more and eating less than they were six years ago. The prevalence of food insecurity has increased from 15.9pc in 2018-19 to 24.4pc in 2024-25, according to the survey. They are also now spending less on education than they were in 2018-19. Almost 4pc of household expenditure went into education six years ago, which declined to around 2.5pc. Household health expenditure being relatively inelastic has slightly increased from 3.22pc to 3.34pc.

HIES 2024-25 shows that macroeconomics and household economics are at odds with one another. Macroeconomic repairs are being carried out by impoverishing the people through high direct and indirect taxes and extremely high and exploitative utility bills. The salaried class is worst hit. Macroeconomic stability is destabilising the people.

The current government has to shoulder the responsibility of this sad state of affairs but the reality is that our economic woes are rooted in the extractive economic system we have been pursuing, our perennial governance issues and — the mother of all issues — our chronically unstable politics. Pakistan desperately needs deep, consistent and sustainable structural reforms in all these domains for which a national consensus needs to be established through a national dialogue among all stakeholders. The seriousness of our social, economic and political issues is such that these cannot be left to one government alone. All parties and state institutions need to sit together and develop a long-term development plan and firewall it against any change of government and any political turbulence.

primary and community-based services — those most accessible to women — remain under-resourced and undervalued. Weak referral systems, in—a—adequate oversight of front-line behaviour, and the exclusion of undocumented populations from planning processes allow these patterns to persist.

Reframing the issue is essential. Women do not avoid healthcare because they are careless or resistant to modern medicine. They avoid it because the system exposes them to indignity, financial strain, and administrative risk. Awareness campaigns alone cannot address this. What is required is health system design that recognises documentation as a barrier, addresses gendered power dynamics, and treats dignity as integral to care. Until healthcare can be accessed without fear, without hidden costs, and without proof of legal belonging, avoidance will remain a rational response. The true measure of a health system is not the sophistication of its hospitals, but whether women — regardless of status — feel safe enough to seek care when it matters most.

Excluded from healthcare

Tahera Hasan

Women's access to healthcare in Pakistan is shaped not only by poverty, but also by the intersection of documentation, marginalisation and gender. After more than a decade of work in one of Karachi's largest informal settlements, it has become evident how the absence of identity documents interacts with restrictive social norms and institutional power imbalances to systematically exclude women from public services. Insights from a community-based maternity home reveal that women's avoidance of healthcare is less about awareness and more about fear, administrative exclusion, and the everyday costs — financial, social, and emotional — of navigating systems that were not designed with them in mind.

Women consistently report feeling safer and more willing to seek care when maternity services are located within their own communities. Proximity reduces travel costs, but more importantly, it limits exposure to spaces where women anticipate scrutiny and judgement. Despite this, reliance on traditional birth attendants, or dais, and home birth remains widespread. These choices are often dismissed as backward or uninformed. In reality, they reflect rational decision-making in an environment where institutional healthcare is frequently experienced as punitive rather than protective.

Home births are not chosen because women are unaware of the risks. Families are acutely conscious of the dangers of maternal and infant mortality, unhygienic practices, and delivery-related complications. What weighs more heavily, however, is the fear of mistreatment within formal health facilities. Women describe being spoken to harshly, questioned about their morality or marital status, and made to feel unwelcome. For many, the prospect of humiliation — particularly in male-dominated, overcrowded public hospitals — is a stronger deterrent than the clinical risks of delivering at home.

This fear is reinforced by the real costs of accessing Pakistan's public healthcare system, even where services are officially free. Travel, repeated visits due to referrals, diagnostic tests, and the time spent away from household or income-generating work can make a single hospital visit a significant burden for low-income families. The cumulative impact of transport, lost wages and logistical challenges often makes seeking institutional care a difficult and sometimes untenable choice.

Documentation acts as a further and decisive barrier. While policy may not always mandate identity documents for maternity care, in practice CNICs, marriage certificates and other paperwork are routinely demanded. Front-line discretion determines access and undocumented women are frequently delayed, discouraged, or turned away. For women without CNICs — many of whom belong to historically marginalised or stateless communities — health facilities become sites of anxiety rather than care.

These administrative barriers are deeply gendered. Women are more likely than men to lack documentation, and more dependent on male relatives to obtain or present it. When documents are missing, women bear the burden of explanation and negotiation. In maternity settings, this vulnerability is heightened. The fear is not only of being refused care, but of being reported, questioned, or publicly shamed. Stories of such encounters circulate quickly within communities, reinforcing collective avoidance of formal healthcare.

For stateless and undocumented populations, the consequences are particularly severe. Statelessness does not simply limit mobility or access to education; it directly amplifies maternal risk. A woman without legal identity is less likely to seek antenatal care, more likely to delay seeking help during complications, and more vulnerable to being excluded at critical moments. In these cases, the link between legal identity and survival in childbirth is stark but largely unacknowledged in policy discussions.

Private healthcare, often presented as an alternative, offers little relief. Costs are prohibitive, and there is growing concern about the routine medicalisation of childbirth. Families report being pushed toward caesarean sections even when normal delivery is medically viable. Decisions are poorly explained, consent is often perfunctory, and costs escalate rapidly. For women who already feel powerless within healthcare settings, such experiences deepen mistrust and reinforce the perception that institutional care prioritises profit or control over patient well-being.

At the core of these experiences lies the question of dignity. Women from low-income and undocumented backgrounds repeatedly describe being treated as burdens rather than patients. Communication is minimal, empathy scarce, and accountability weak. These interactions mirror broader social hierarchies, where class, gender, and legal status intersect to shape who is deemed deserving of care.

The persistence of home births and reliance on dais should therefore be understood as a symptom of systemic failure. Pakistan's health system remains heavily oriented towards tertiary care, while

Forgotten women

Nasira Habib

Seventy-Seven per cent of Pakistan's more than 11 million farms are smaller than five acres, yet the country's agricultural policies rarely reflect this reality. They fail to recognise that the survival of these farms depends heavily on women's labour and ecological knowledge. Despite their central role, women remain largely invisible in agricultural policy, planning, and data.

Across Pakistan's agroecological zones — in Punjab's plains, Sindh's deserts, and the mountain valleys of Khyber Pakhtunkhwa, Balochistan and Gilgit-Baltistan — women's knowledge of soils, seeds, plants and seasonal rhythms has been refined over generations. They traditionally managed organic materials in ways that maintained soil fertility. They selected diverse crop varieties, preserving traits for soil types, water availability, taste, cookability, and resilience.

These processes yielded thousands of seed varieties emerging from local ecosystems. They developed an intimate and holistic understanding of their local ecosystems, soil and plant health, and plant properties, including medicinal uses. Grandma's remedies still come in handy to heal our minds and bodies.

Women also sustained livestock, which is a central pillar of food sovereignty. They fed and watered cattle, buffaloes, goats, sheep and poultry; collected fodder and grasses; milked animals; made yoghurt, lassi, cheese, butter and ghee; and applied traditional remedies for common illnesses. Their labour formed the bedrock of mixed crop-livestock systems, which nourished rural families and stabilised incomes.

But the Green Revolution of the 1960s and 1970s dismissed the critical role of women. Their composting, nutrient-recycling and carbon-sequestering systems were abandoned in favour of synthetic fertilisers that initially boosted yields but eventually depleted soil organic matter and disrupted microbial life. Their seed-saving skills were replaced by commercial seeds that had to be purchased each season.

Chemical inputs, including pesticides, replaced the centuries-old wisdom that had emerged from peaceful coexistence with nature. Their management of diverse cropping systems was undermined by monocultures. The ecological balance that women maintained — through mixed cropping, organic recycling, and careful water use — was pushed aside.

Despite their central role in sustaining small farms, rural women are too often reduced to unpaid labourers with ever-increasing workloads but no rights and no voice. They work longer hours than men, perform the most physically demanding tasks, and yet hold little to no decision-making authority over land, income or farm planning.

Today, Pakistan's farms bear the consequences: declining soil fertility, widespread micronutrient deficiency, pesticide contamination, water depletion and a dangerous dependence on costly external inputs.

Food insecurity is rising even as production systems grow more fragile. The promise of the Green Revolution has given way to a landscape of ecological degradation and economic vulnerability. As climate change intensifies, as floods, droughts, and heatwaves become more frequent and as male out-migration increases, women's responsibilities have grown heavier — while their rights remain unchanged.

Reversing this damage requires returning to the principles that women have long embodied: recycling organic matter, protecting genetic re-sources and biodiversity, and working with — and not against — ecological processes.

Agroecology does not replace traditional knowledge — it builds upon it. It gives a scientific and policy language to what women have practised for generations. It strengthens soil health, restores biodiversity, eliminates chemical dependence, and enhances climate resilience.

Pakistan's agricultural future depends on recognising rural women not merely as workers but also as farmers, ecological stewards, innovators and leaders. Their daily decisions shape the fertility of our soils, the biodiversity of our fields, the health of our livestock and the nutrition of our families.

Women have sustained smallholder agriculture for generations. The time has come for our policies, institutions, and national imagination to place them at the centre — and to learn from the ecological wisdom they have safeguarded for centuries. Empowering women is not an act of social benevolence; it is a practical necessity for environmental regeneration and food sovereignty.

Afterlife of disaster

Maria ahmad

Fifteen years after the Airblue ED 202 plane crash that killed all 152 people on board, an appellate court in Islamabad has awarded Rs5.4 billion in compensation to the families of eight victims. This is unlikely to be the end of the matter. The case will move through further stages of appeal, and the money may not arrive anytime soon. That part is familiar. What is easier to miss is the quieter truth beneath it, that these families are still carrying a national tragedy through the legal system long after the rest of the country has moved on.

The dead do not file claims. The living do. The living learn dates and numbers they never asked to know. They learn how to speak about the thing that happened to them in the language of tort — accident, negligence, vicarious liability — because institutions require a vocabulary before they offer attention.

For the law to engage at all, grief has to be translated into loss. Grief is not the same as loss. Grief is lived. Loss is legible — set out in documents, files and defined heads of damages. Joan Didion wrote of grief as resistant to sequence or sense. Law insists on both.

A plane crash does not need interpretation but the law requires it to be categorised. The crash has to be placed within the terms of international conventions and liability regimes so that legal responsibility can be argued and assessed. Once grief enters this legal order, it takes on a different form. The grieving family adopts new roles and descriptions: plaintiffs, respondents, applicants, legal heirs, dependants. Lived time does not move in the same register as legal time, which advances in adjournments and orders, while grief remains where it is.

There is nothing exceptional about this. From the Pan Am Flight 103 crash in Scotland to Malaysian Airlines MH17 in Ukraine, families affected by aviation disasters in history have described the same afterlife of catastrophe: years spent repeating the same facts, the same narrative, keeping loss institutionally intelligible, even after public urgency has passed.

In the constitutive accounts of law associated with American sociologists Patricia Ewick and Susan Silbey, legality does not operate only at the level of courts and statutes. It is made and remade by the ordinary actions of ordinary people, whose lives are reshaped as they move through legal processes. In other words, when people turn to law, they do not simply use it. They supply it with what it needs to function, and are adjusted by that process in turn.

If, as legal sociologists suggest, it is out of the most ordinary acts that law is produced, then grief does not merely encounter the legal system. It helps sustain it. Each filing, appearance, and statement of loss performs the work through which legality reproduces itself in the aftermath of tragedy. That work is not abstract. Courts rely on earlier accounts of loss to decide what care was owed, how responsibility should be fixed, and what compensation is appropriate. A 1991 US supreme court judgement on damages for mental distress for passengers following a near-crash is still referenced in aviation litigation. A damages claim following the PIA flight PK 668 crash in Multan in 2006 sits behind the Airblue judgements.

These tragic histories are rarely recalled in full. In legal argument, whole catastrophes are reduced to a single name. 'Lockerbie' is no longer just a place in Scotland, but shorthand standing in for years of loss. This does more than just preserve loss. Reduced this way, loss is able to travel — across cases, places, and time — and to set, in advance, the terms on which later loss will have to be presented in order to be institutionally recognised. That is how grieving persons turn to the law already knowing what will be demanded of them and what kinds of suffering can be compared. What was extracted from grief remains in circulation as loss, available for public use, detached from the people who first bore the cost of making their suffering usable.

None of this imputes villainy. Nor is it novel. It's a structural requirement of a common law system that depends on continuity, precedent, reasoned justification. Legal systems account carefully for outcomes. They are less attentive to what it takes to sustain participation. Loss has to remain available for the law to continue, but the burden of keeping it so leaves little trace in the record. That is why the recent Airblue judgments should land with force, even if they are headed into further rounds of appeal. Not because anything finally settles after all these years, but because the demands placed on the grieving may now, perhaps, begin to recede. Keeping one's grief permanently available to the system is not a civic function anyone should have to bear.

Citing vast reserves of gemstones in Pakistan, he instructed geological surveys to determine the geography and value of these reserves, ensuring full consultation with all relevant institutions, provincial governments, and stakeholders.

The prime minister also instructed immediate measures to establish international-standard laboratories and certification systems.

Prime Minister Shehbaz directed the establishment of two model Centers of Excellence for gem-stones in the country this year and engaging the internationally acclaimed experts to resolve obstacles in policy implementation.

He said that the country's gemstone exports were negligible comparing immense reserves, and called for encouraging private companies, especially young entrepreneurs, to invest in the sector.

Highlighting the globally-famed quality of Pakistan's precious stones, he said that curbing smuggling and promoting legal exports would bring in billions of dollars in foreign exchange.

Value addition of raw material imperative to promote exports: FCCI

FAISALABAD (APP): President Faisalabad Chamber of Commerce & Industry (FCCI) Farooq Yousaf Sheikh said that fundamentally Faisalabad is an agrarian economy and we must excel in value addition of raw material produced in vast tracts of its farm land which is imperative to promote exports of high value, packed and innovative food products.

workforce. He expressed satisfaction over the successive bumper crop of potato and said that our farmers should avoid selling their produce at throwaway prices but try to add value through non-traditional strategies. He said that vegetables, potatoes and other perishable products must be preserved and exported to earn precious foreign exchange in order to root out rural poverty.

Referring to Pakistan's recent economic challenges, the commerce minister acknowledged that the country went through a difficult phase marked by high inflation, elevated interest rates and trade constraints. However, he said the situation has improved significantly. "From recovery to stability, Pakistan has taken a difficult but necessary course. Sino-Pak green energy coop leads to sustainable growth

ISLAMABAD (INP): Chinese solar solutions are becoming increasingly embedded in Pakistan's industrial and public-service sectors, helping stabilize electricity supply, reduce operating costs and support the country's shift toward cleaner energy, according to a report published by China Economic Net (CEN) on Friday.

In Multan, a 300-kilowatt solar power system installed at Laeeque Rafique Hospital serves as a critical backup source, ensuring that essential medical equipment continues to operate during grid disruptions.

Hospital administrators say the system has strengthened energy security for patient care.

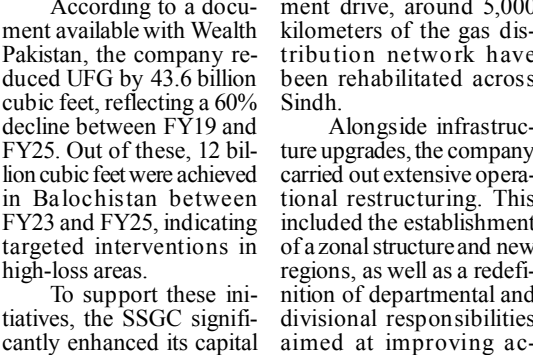

Manufacturing facilities are also benefiting from Chinese photovoltaic technology. At the Pak Rice Mill along the GT Road in Kamoke, a 400-kilowatt rooftop solar installation generates about 5.46 million kilowatt-hours of electricity annually, reducing carbon emissions by more than 520 tonnes.

"Pak Rice is sold across Pakistan," said factory representative Ahmed Ilyas. "Since installing solar panels, our electricity costs have fallen and production efficiency has improved."

Such projects reflect a broader strategy by Chinese companies to adapt renewable-energy solutions to local conditions.

According to Xu Ting, Middle East and Africa regional general manager at Astronergy, the Pakistani government is actively promoting distributed solar power as a way to ease electricity shortages and reduce reliance on fossil fuels.

That policy environment has helped accelerate market growth. Astronergy reported shipments of nearly 465 megawatts to Pakistan in 2024, and deliveries rose to 750 megawatts in 2025—an increase of more than 60% year on year.

SSGC cuts unaccounted-for-gas losses by 60 per cent

ISLAMABAD (APP): The Sui Southern Gas Company Limited (SSGC) has achieved a major reduction in unaccounted-for-gas (UFG) through a series of structural, technical and governance reforms implemented over the past several years.

According to a document available with Wealth Pakistan, the company reduced UFG by 43.6 billion cubic feet, reflecting a 60% decline between FY19 and FY25. Out of these, 12 billion cubic feet were achieved in Balochistan between FY23 and FY25, indicating targeted interventions in high-loss areas.

To support these initiatives, the SSGC significantly enhanced its capital investment in gas infrastructure. Capitalization increased from Rs9 billion in FY22 to Rs17 billion in FY23, followed by further expansion to Rs24 billion in FY24 and Rs37 billion in FY25. The company has projected capitalization of Rs40 billion for FY26 and FY27.

As part of this investment drive, around 5,000 kilometers of the gas distribution network have been rehabilitated across Sindh.

Alongside infrastructure upgrades, the company carried out extensive operational restructuring. This included the establishment of a zonal structure and new regions, as well as a redefinition of departmental and divisional responsibilities aimed at improving accountability and operational efficiency.

ISLAMABAD: Federal Minister for Petroleum Ali Pervaiz Malik held a briefing session with Pakistan's Ambassadors and High Commissioners to mobilise international participation for the Pakistan Minerals Investment Forum 2026.

Malik engages Pakistan's envoys to mobilise global participation for PMIF 2026

ISLAMABAD (APP): Federal Minister for Petroleum Ali Pervaiz Malik held a briefing session with Pakistan's Ambassadors and High Commissioners posted in key foreign capitals to advance preparations and mobilise international participation for the Pakistan Minerals Investment Forum 2026 (PMIF26).

The meeting was conducted virtually with Pakistan's Missions abroad, while senior officials from the Petroleum Division and representatives of key public sector entities attended in person, said a press release issued here.

The session focused on aligning diplomatic outreach with national economic priorities and positioning PMIF26 as a premier global platform for investment in Pakistan's mineral and mining sector.

During the briefing, the federal minister outlined the vision, scale and strategic importance of PMIF26, emphasising that the forum represents a national economic priority.

He urged Ambassadors and High Commissioners to actively engage with leading mining companies, institutional investors, financial institutions and relevant government counterparts in their host countries to ensure broad-based and meaningful international participation.

"PMIF26 will serve as a key platform for promoting mining awareness, stimulating economic activity and attracting sustainable investment into Pakistan's mineral sector," the Minister stated.

Recalling the success of PMIF 2025, the Minister highlighted that the previous edition was organised in line with international standards and delivered tangible outcomes. The forum attracted participation from over 50 countries and more than 5,000 delegates, while the signing of 14 MoUs with globally recognised companies validated growing international confidence in Pakistan's mineral sector.

Chinese technology powers homes and harvests in Pakistan

ISLAMABAD (INP): Chinese solar technology powers homes and harvests in Pakistan, China Economic Net (CEN) reported on Friday. The report says, for years, Rashid Akram and his family endured the harsh routines of summer in Lahore, where temperatures regularly climb above 45 degrees Celsius.

Chronic power outages and rising electricity prices have long strained households and farmers across Pakistan, particularly during peak heat.

That began to change about 18 months ago, when Akram installed 36 rooftop solar photovoltaic modules from Chinese manufacturer Astronergy, following a recommendation from a friend.

Rashid Akram's home. [Photo provided by Astronergy] "The most noticeable difference is the electricity bill," Akram said. "Even on the hottest days, our air conditioners and refrigerators run without interruption." The 21-kilowatt system generates about 28.5 megawatt-hours of electricity a year, significantly reducing household energy costs while cutting carbon emissions by an estimated 27.36 tonnes annually.

Such installations are becoming increasingly common across Pakistan. As economic growth and rising appliance ownership place added strain on an ageing power grid, rooftop solar—once considered a niche option—has increasingly become a practical solution for energy security.

Gaza civil defence says Israeli attacks kill 13 including 5 children

GAZA CITY (AFP/APP): Gaza's civil defence agency said Israeli attacks in the Palestinian territory on Thursday killed at least 13 people, including five children, despite a ceasefire that has largely halted the fighting.

Four people, including three children, were killed when a drone struck a tent sheltering displaced people in southern Gaza, agency spokesman Mahmud Bassal told AFP.

In the north of the Gaza Strip, an 11-year-old girl was killed near the Jabalia refugee camp and a strike on a school killed one person, while a drone near Khan Yunis in the south killed a man, the agency added.

Two more Gazans, including a child, were killed in other attacks, reported the agency, which operates under Hamas authority.

Later on Thursday evening, four more people were killed in an Israeli air strike that targeted a house in an eastern area of Gaza City, Bassal said, adding that rescue work to search for several people who were missing had begun.

"The death toll has risen to 13 as a result of Israeli strikes on the Gaza Strip since this morning in a clear violation of the ceasefire agreement," Bassal said.

In a statement Friday morning, the Israeli military said it "precisely struck Hamas terrorists and terror infrastructure in the southern and northern Gaza Strip" in response to a "failed projectile" launch.

"The projectile that was launched from the Gaza Strip constitutes a violation of the ceasefire agreement," the statement added.

Since October 10, a fragile US-sponsored truce in Gaza has largely halted the fighting between Israeli forces and Hamas, but both sides have alleged frequent violations.

Hamas spokesman Hazem Qassem told AFP that the strikes in Gaza on Thursday "confirm the Israeli occupation's renunciation of its commitment to the ceasefire".

Israeli forces have killed at least 425 Palestinians in Gaza since the ceasefire took effect, according to Gaza's health ministry.

At least 21 people were killed on November 22 in Israeli strikes, making it one of the deadliest days in Gaza since the ceasefire came into effect.

The Israeli military said militants have killed three of its soldiers during the same period.

Xi chairs CPC leadership meeting to hear work reports of state institutions

BEIJING (Xinhua/APP): The Communist Party of China (CPC) leadership met on Thursday to hear a series of work reports from the leading Party members' groups of the top legislature, central government, top political advisory body, supreme court and supreme procuratorate. The Standing Committee of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee also heard a work report from the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee.

Xi Jinping, general secretary of the CPC Central Committee, presided over and addressed the meeting. The meeting emphasized that China is confronted with profound and complex changes in its development environment over the five-year period ahead, with arduous and demanding tasks on the agenda. It stressed the imperative of upholding, making full use of, and further developing the Party's leadership—the country's greatest institutional strength—to provide the fundamental guarantee for advancing Chinese modernization. Last year, the leading Party members' groups of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress, the State Council, the National Committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference, the Supreme People's Court and the Supreme People's Procuratorate resolutely upheld the authority of the CPC Central Committee and its centralized, unified leadership, and made significant advancements in various fields, the meeting noted.

US, Colombia vow joint fight against guerrillas: minister

BOGOTÁ (AFP/APP): Colombia's leftist President Gustavo Petro agreed with his US counterpart Donald Trump to take "joint action" against cocaine-smuggling guerrillas on the border with Venezuela, Bogota's interior minister said Thursday.

The two leaders held their first phone call on Wednesday, de-escalating tensions after Trump had threatened military action against Colombia following the ouster of Venezuela's leftist leader Nicolas Maduro by US forces.

Trump and Petro "committed to taking joint actions" against the National Liberation Army (ELN), Colombia's last remaining major armed rebel group, Interior Minister Armando Benedetti said in an interview with Blu Radio.

Colombia accuses the ELN of launching attacks and kidnappings of Colombian soldiers and retreating to rear-base locations in Venezuela.

Petro asked Trump "to help strike hard at the ELN on the border" with Venezuela, Benedetti said.

He said the guerrillas must "be attacked in their rear" as well as on Colombian soil. Colombia and Venezuela share a porous 2,200-kilometer (1,400-mile) border where various armed groups vie for control of the profits from drug trafficking, illegal mining and smuggling.

Later Thursday, the leader of a separate rebel grouping summoned other guerrilla commanders to a meeting to discuss the US removal of Maduro.

"We know we have had our differences in the past...but today we are facing a common enemy" in the United States, said Ivan Mordisco, leader of the remnants of the dissolved FARC armed movement, also thought to have rear-bases in Venezuela.

European political order 'in danger': France

PARIS (AFP/APP): The European political order "is today in danger", the French foreign minister said on Friday in his annual address to France's ambassadors.

"No, European civilisation will not fade away. But yes, our political order is today in danger, despite its precious stability in an unpredictable world, despite its immense scientific, technological, cultural and financial wealth," said Jean-Noel Barrot. A US national security strategy released in December by the administration of President Donald Trump launched a brutal attack on Europe, describing it as facing "civilisational erasure" from migration and calling for "cultivating resistance" among right-wing parties.

"No, Europe is not on the brink of civilisational erasure, and the presumptuous voices claiming it is would do better to watch out for their own erasure."

'War is back in vogue,' Pope Leo says

VATICAN CITY (AFP/APP): Pope Leo XIV told diplomats to the Vatican on Friday that war was "back in vogue," delivering a speech warning of sabre-rattling and a weakness of multilateralism.

"A diplomacy that promotes dialogue and seeks consensus among all parties is being replaced by a diplomacy based on force, by either individuals or groups of allies."

"War is back in vogue and a zeal for war is spreading," said the first US pope.

Leo warned that the principle established after the Second World War, "which prohibited nations from using force to violate the borders of others, has been completely undermined."

"Peace is sought through weapons as a condition for asserting one's own dominion."

Despite aid efforts, UN warns winter devastates displaced in Gaza & West Bank

UNITED NATIONS (APP): Despite harsh winter conditions and continuing Israeli restrictions, the UN and partners are maintaining large-scale humanitarian operations in Gaza and the occupied West Bank, with a focus on shelter, water, health and education.

Briefing reporters in New York on Thursday, UN spokesperson Stephane Dujarric, citing the UN aid coordination office, OCHA, said humanitarian teams are continuing to support the most vulnerable families in Gaza "despite impediments" and the cumulative impact of two years of conflict between Israeli forces and Hamas militants.

"Over the past days, one of our partners distributed 7,000 dignity kits, more than 5,600 dignified family hygiene kits and 1.3 million bars of soap to some 200,000 people," he said, stressing that assistance is reaching communities in both the north and south of the devastated Strip.

Emergency shelter support remains a priority as temperatures drop, it was pointed out.

Humanitarian partners have reached more than 16,000 households across Gaza with tents, tarpaulins and other essential materials, including kits to weatherproof and reinforce makeshift shelters.

Israel army says struck Hezbollah targets in 'several areas' of Lebanon

JERUSALEM (AFP/APP): Israel's military said it struck Hezbollah targets in several areas of Lebanon on Friday, a day after the Lebanese army said it had completed the first phase of its plan to disarm the group.

Under US pressure and amid fears of expanded Israeli strikes, Lebanon has committed to disarming the Iran-backed militant group, which was weakened by more than a year of hostilities with Israel including two months of all-out war that ended with a November 2024 ceasefire.

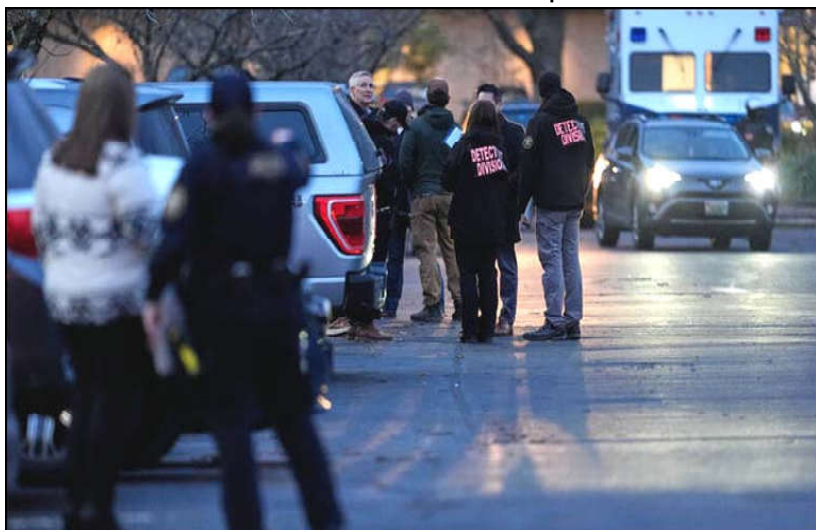

Despite the truce, Israel has kept up regular strikes in Lebanon, usually saying it is targeting Hezbollah sites and operatives, and has maintained troops in five south Lebanon areas it deems strategic, accusing the group of rearming. In a statement on Friday, the Israeli military said it struck "several areas in Lebanon", targeting "weapons storage facilities and a weapons production site that were used for the rehabilitation and military build-up of the Hezbollah terrorist organisation".

"Additionally, several launch sites and rocket launchers, along with military structures, were struck," it added.

Moscow says US released two Russian crew from seized tanker

MOSCOW (AFP/APP): Russia on Friday said the United States had decided to release two Russian members of the crew of a Russian-flagged oil tanker that Washington seized earlier this week.

The American authorities said the tanker was part of a shadow fleet that carried oil for countries such as Venezuela, Russia and Iran in violation of US sanctions, and seized it in the North Atlantic despite the ship being escorted by the Russian navy.

"In response to our request, US President Donald Trump has decided to release two Russian citizens aboard the Marinera tanker, previously detained by the United States during an operation in the North Atlantic," Russian foreign ministry spokeswoman Maria Zakharova said in a statement.

"We welcome this decision and express our gratitude to the US leadership," she added.

Boys recount 'torment' at hands of armed rebels in DR Congo

BUNIA (AFP/APP): Forcibly recruited into a rebel militia affiliated with the Islamic State group, two boys revealed the "torment" of living in its camps as members committed massacres in the Democratic Republic of Congo's northeast.

The two minors freed from the Allied Democratic Forces (ADF) gave AFP an unprecedented account of the shadowy group, notorious for its extreme brutality.

Paluku, a frail 12-year-old, spent two months with the ADF after rebels killed his mother during an attack on his village in eastern North Kivu province. His brother and sister were also captured.

Edouard, 17, spent a gruelling four years with the ADF—formed by Ugandan rebels who took refuge in the DRC—after he was kidnapped at age 12.

The two boys spoke on condition of using pseudonyms at a centre specialising in the care of minors recruited by armed groups in the region, whose location AFP has chosen not to disclose to avoid potential reprisals.

Their accounts were confirmed by health and security sources.

Round-faced Edouard, a fast-talker, described his years of "torment" within the ADF.

One dead, dozens missing after Philippine dump site collapse

MANILA (AFP/APP): Rescue workers searched on Friday for dozens of people buried under a mountain of garbage that collapsed at a landfill in the central Philippines, killing at least one.

Nearly 50 sanitation workers were buried when the towering pile of refuse toppled onto them at Binaliw Landfill, a privately operated facility in Cebu City, on Thursday.

"There are signs of life," Cebu mayor Nestor Archival told a news briefing, adding that hundreds of rescuers already on site would be joined by "another 500" for search efforts he expected to last through to Sunday.

Rescuers were limited in what equipment they could use because any sparks threatened to ignite methane gas emitted by the landfill, he said.

Thirty-four people remain missing, according to Archival, who revised down a tally of 38 given earlier on his Facebook page.

At least 12 employees have been pulled alive from the garbage and hospitalised.

Jason Morata, a city assistant public information officer, told AFP the trash mountain "must be four storeys high".

Aerial photos released by police showed what appeared to be multiple structures crushed under the weight of the garbage.

Russian attack damaged 20 Kyiv residential buildings, Qatar embassy: Zelensky

KYIV (AFP/APP): A "massive" Russian night-time attack on Ukraine damaged 20 residential buildings in Kyiv and its suburbs, as well as Qatar's embassy, President Volodymyr Zelensky said Friday. Russia hit Ukraine as temperatures plunged to freezing with its latest barrage of missiles—including the hypersonic Oreshnik—as Moscow rejected Western proposals to end its almost four-year invasion.

Kyiv was the worst hit in the strikes, Ukraine said, with four people killed and at least 25 wounded.

"Twenty residential buildings alone were damaged," Zelensky said, adding that "a building of the Embassy of Qatar was damaged last night by a Russian drone". "Qatar, a state that does so much to mediate with Russia in order to secure the release of prisoners of war and civilians held in Russian prisons," he said.

Zelensky said Russia attacked with 13 ballistic missiles, including the Oreshnik, and 22 cruise missiles, while also launching 242 drones on Ukraine. Russian military bloggers said the Oreshnik missile was used to hit a major gas depot in the Lviv region in western Ukraine. The Ukrainian leader said an ambulance worker was among those killed in Kyiv in a double-tap attack. "There was a second strike on one of the residential buildings—precisely at the moment when first responders were providing assistance after the first strike."

Syria announces ceasefire with Kurdish fighters in Aleppo

ALEPPO (AFP/APP): Syria's defence ministry announced a ceasefire in Aleppo on Friday after days of deadly clashes between the army and Kurdish fighters forced thousands of civilians to flee.

The violence killed 21 people and was the latest challenge for a country still struggling to forge a new path after Islamist authorities ousted longtime ruler Bashar al-Assad just over a year ago.

Since Tuesday, government forces have been fighting the US-backed Kurdish-led Syrian Democratic Forces (SDF) in Aleppo, the country's second city. Both sides have traded blame over who started the fighting, which comes as they struggle to implement a deal to merge the Kurds' administration and military into the country's new government.

The SDF controls swathes of Syria's oil-rich north and northeast, and was key to the territorial defeat of the Islamic State group in Syria in 2019. "To prevent any slide towards a new military escalation within residential neighbourhoods, the Ministry of Defence announces ... a ceasefire in the vicinity of the Sheikh Maqsd, Ashrafiyeh and Bani Zeid neighbourhoods of Aleppo, effective from 3:00 am," the ministry wrote in a statement.

There was no immediate comment from Kurdish forces in response.

Kurdish fighters were given until 9:00 am Friday (0600 GMT) to leave the three neighbourhoods, while the Aleppo governorate said the fighters would be sent, along with their light weapons, to Kurdish areas further east.

The ceasefire appeared to be holding through Friday morning, said an AFP photographer located on the edge of the Ashrafiyeh neighbourhood.

Trump says US oil pledged $100 bn for Venezuela ahead of White House meeting

WASHINGTON (AFP/APP): US President Donald Trump said Friday the world's biggest oil companies pledged to invest $100 billion to revive Venezuela's oil sector as he prepared for a meeting with top industry executives.

US forces seized Venezuelan president Nicolas Maduro in a sweeping military operation on January 3, with Trump making no secret that control of Venezuela's oil was at the heart of his actions.

"At least 100 Billion Dollars will be invested by BIG OIL, all of whom I will be meeting with today at The White House," Trump wrote on his social media platform ahead of the gathering, where he was expected to convince the oil heads to support his plans in Venezuela.

The Trump administration has repeatedly said that it is running Venezuela, with Energy Secretary Chris Wright on Wednesday asserting that Washington will control the country's oil industry "indefinitely."

Venezuelan interim

President Delcy Rodriguez, who was Maduro's deputy, has said that her government remains in charge, with the state-run oil firm saying only that it was in negotiations with the United States on oil sales.

In his social media post, Trump said he cancelled a second wave of strikes on Venezuela due to what he called "cooperation" from the country.

He noted Venezuela began releasing political prisoners this week and said the countries are "working well together, especially as it pertains to rebuilding...their oil and gas infrastructure."

US outlet NBC News reported that the heads of Exxon Mobil, Chevron and ConocoPhillips are expected at the White House meeting. "It's just a meeting to discuss, obviously, the immense opportunity that is before these oil companies right now," Trump's spokesperson Leavitt told reporters Wednesday.

Chevron is the only US company that currently has a license to operate in Venezuela.

Protesters, US law enforcers clash after immigration agent kills woman

MINNEAPOLIS (AFP/APP): Protesters clashed with law enforcement in Minneapolis Thursday after the fatal shooting of a US woman further deepened the divide over President Donald Trump's deployment of federal forces to crackdown on illegal immigration.

Renee Nicole Good, 37, was shot in the head on Wednesday as she apparently tried to drive away from agents in the northern US city as they approached her car, which they said blocked their way.

Vice President JD Vance said, without providing evidence, Good was part of a "broader left-wing network" opposed to Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE), and insisted the officer acted in "self-defense."

The White House asserted that US law enforcement was under "organized attack" and presented a version of the shooting disputed by officials in Minnesota, who contend that federal forces are making the streets more dangerous.

Large, noisy crowds gathered around Minneapolis in protest on Thursday, chanting slogans against ICE. Federal immigration officers armed with pepperball guns and tear gas wrestled several protesters to the ground. More protests are planned.

In a separate incident Thursday afternoon, US immigration enforcement agents shot and wounded two individuals in the western city of Portland, local police said.

"Two people are in the hospital following a shooting involving federal agents," a statement from Portland Police said, adding a man and a woman were wounded by "apparent gunshot wounds." That incident was still unfolding.

Trump and senior officials have claimed that in the Minneapolis incident, Good was trying to kill the ICE agents.

At UN, Pakistan welcomes Syria's cooperation with OPCW on chemical weapons destruction

UNITED NATIONS (APP): Welcoming Syria's cooperation with the Technical Secretariat of Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons (OPCW), Pakistan has underscored the need for independent verification to eliminate suspected chemical weapons in Syria that were developed under the Assad regime and any risks of proliferation.

"We look forward to their continued cooperation, in full compliance with the CWC and Security Council resolutions, to close the Syrian chemical weapons file as soon as possible," Ambassador Usman Jadoon, acting permanent representative of Pakistan to the United Nations, told the UN Security Council on Thursday.

The 15-member Council had met to discuss Syria's 'chemical weapons file', focusing on issues related to the use, monitoring and compliance with international obligations on chemical weapons.

As highlighted by the Technical Secretariat, the Pakistani envoy said it was also important to bridge the gap between "what the Syrian Arab Republic must provide and the capacity it has at its disposal".

"Continued international support to Syria and the Technical Secretariat, therefore, remains critically important," he said.

At the same time, Ambassador Jadoon said Pakistan supports Syria's unity, sovereignty and territorial integrity, which are essential for durable peace and stability, while also backing an inclusive, Syrian-owned and Syrian-led political process.

The Pakistani envoy pointed out that Syria's security situation is severely affected by Israel's military occupation of parts of Syrian territory and its continued strikes on Syrian sites and facilities, which have also impeded OPCW's technical work.

FCCP adjourns hearing of super tax case for Jan 12

ISLAMABAD (APP): The Federal Constitutional Court of Pakistan on Friday adjourned the hearing of a set of petitions related to the super tax after the counsel for the taxpayer companies concluded his arguments.

The case will now be taken up again on Monday, January 12. During the proceedings, a key point that emerged was that determining the ceiling for petroleum falls within the constitutional domain of the federation; however, the court noted that the exercise of this authority must remain within the bounds of moderation and established law. The three-member bench, headed by Chief Justice of the Federal Constitutional Court Justice

Amin-ud-Din Khan and comprising Justice Hassan Azhar Rizvi and Justice Arshad Hussain Shah, heard the matter.

Presenting detailed arguments on behalf of various companies, senior counsel Makhdoom Ali Khan contended that the withdrawal of statutory exemptions available to petroleum companies constituted a violation of the Tax Act of 1948 and the Petroleum Companies Act. He argued that the exemptions granted to petroleum exploration companies under the 1948 Act could not be rescinded, and noted that the Islamabad High Court had previously affirmed that exemptions must be granted wherever the law provides for them.

Blocking democracy won't solve crises, rulers must abandon RTS and form-47 tactics: Naeem

Independent Report

LAHORE: Jamaat-e-Islami Pakistan Emir Hafiz Naeem ur Rehman has warned the ruling elite that blocking democratic pathways and branding political dissent as treason will not resolve the country's deepening crises. "The powerful must abandon manipulation through 'RTS' and 'Form-47 tactics' and stop imposing restrictions on the youth," he said while addressing participants of training camp at Mansoorah on Friday.

He said the country Pakistan is being held hostage by a class that thrives on corruption, oppression, falsehood, and injustice.

The imposed elite, he added, has deprived the nation of basic rights such as education, healthcare, and justice. Resisting the obsolete system and its protectors is a fundamental religious obligation, said the JI chief, asserting that Jamaat-e-Islami will bring change through the strength of public opinion.

Rehman said the rulers are fearful of the new generation, particularly Generation Z, and are systematically closing the doors of education and employment on them.

He warned that widespread despair among the youth is pushing them toward drug abuse. To counter this, he said, Alkhidmat Foundation and Jamaat-e-Islami have expanded the "Bano Qabil" initiative into a comprehensive youth development project called Z-Connect, aimed at providing education, skills, and moral training. "We will not allow our youth to become victims of systemic oppression," he said, expressing confidence that genuine change would come through public support, especially the younger generation.

He announced that anyone committed to struggling against the outdated system could join Jamaat-e-Islami, stressing that the party's doors are open to people of all sects. He described Jamaat-e-Islami as a movement for Iqamat-e-Deen (establishment of the Islamic system). Referring to Bangladesh, Rehman said Jamaat-e-Islami there faced decades of brutal repression, with senior leaders executed and thousands of workers imprisoned under the rule of Sheikh Mujibur Rahman's daughter, Sheikh Hasina.

Minister leads Islamabad environment review, orders streamlined action

ISLAMABAD (APP): Federal Minister for Climate Change and Environmental Coordination Dr Musadik Malik on Friday chaired a high-level meeting to review environmental protection measures and the preservation of green cover in the federal capital, stressing the need for coordinated and transparent action to address public health and ecological concerns.

During the briefing, Dr Malik was informed about an ongoing campaign aimed at reducing the presence of non-native paper mulberry trees in Islamabad.

Officials told the minister that the species is highly allergenic and a major contributor to severe allergies and asthma-related health issues among residents of the capital.

The campaign focuses on the selective removal of paper mulberry trees in areas where their concentration exceeds 90 per cent, including Shakarparian, F-9 Park, and parts of the H-8 and H-9 sectors. These will be replaced with native, fruit-bearing trees and pine species.

Dr Malik was assured that the campaign would not lead to a reduction in Islamabad's overall tree cover, as plans are in place to plant more trees than those removed. Replantation efforts will include the installation of mature native trees to accelerate ecological recovery.

Emphasising timely implementation, the minister directed relevant departments to strengthen coordination to ensure plantation activities are carried out during the upcoming spring season.
